A physical exam is always a good place to start when parents have concerns about their child. It will rule out any conditions that may be causing a child's symptoms.

In Pennsylvania, most children under age 18 with serious emotional and behavioral disturbances qualify for free services through Medical Assistance, regardless of family income or insurance status. For more information, go to www.dpw.state.pa and www.chesco.org.

When seeking these services for your child, keep other systems informed (such as the child's school or your pediatrician). Chester County's philosophy is that individuals and families get the best care when systems share resources and work together.
